The Monthly Newsletter for Heather Hiestand, Eilis Flynn, and Anh Leod

OCTOBER 2008

October's Orchestra

Now that summer has vanished (for some people that's a good thing, for others not so much), Eilis, Heather and Anh are industriously settling into the busy season, only occasionally hearing the rustle of leaves cascade from the trees. Anh's latest work, Cherokee's Playmates, is out on October 10, and she can't wait to see what the reaction is to this, the latest in her newest series!

So what have we been up to this past month? Plenty! Eilis has had her next book accepted at Cerridwen! Now titled Echoes of Passion, it's part of the Hunters for Hire series, the Bounty Hunters Inc. universe that Anh and Eilis had a hand in creating last year and that Anh's book, Recreating John Doe, is a part of. We'll have details on its publication date in a month or two!

Not only that, Eilis has finally gotten around to having a website of her own designed so that Heather and Anh can have their own space! But don't worry, Eilis is going to drop by for (virtual) coffee on Sundays from time to time for those chatty, caffeine-driven conversations she and Heather used to have on Sundays when Heather lived closer by. So Eilis will be at eilisflynn.com, Heather at heatherhiestand.com, and we'll eventually have www.coffeonsundays.info for Sunday coffee chats (we'll let you know when we set that up!). And not only that, we'll have this newsletter to tell you what's going on!

And finally, Eilis has been busy doing even more interviews. Check out the short & sweet Q&A she did with USA Today best-selling author Yasmine Galenorn. And check out the interview at Paraphernalia online magazine about superheroes and the piece Eilis wrote for "Paranormality Universe" about faeries along the Silk Road (see the appearances section for URLs).

Now, what's Heather and Anh been up to? All sorts of projects! Heather's been working on stories for Cerridwen, while Anh's been working on a few for Ellora's Cave. Heather/Anh is the featured author(s) for October at rosecityromancewriters.blogspot.com! The blog will have Cherokee's Playmates up all month, and she'll be blogging as Anh Leod on October 1, and as Heather Hiestand on October 13. She'll also see the print release of Heather's Cards Never Lie in the next few weeks, so get ready!

An Excerpt From Cherokee's Playmates

"That's bright, man." Dylan blinked in the paparazzi lights outside the movie theater.

"Let's get out of here." Cherokee needed to tug Dylan downstairs to the parking garage for a little private time. The cameras weren't for him even if he was an actor, but the tabloids wouldn't hesitate to print a picture of him kissing another man if he ever became a big deal in Hollywood.

He tilted his head toward the stairwell. Dylan nodded and moved toward it.

Tonight wasn't supposed to be all about Dylan, but when the foursome Cherokee had envisioned filling his Friday night had fallen apart, he'd taken the strikingly sexy architect to the movies so he could check out the latest film from the producer he was meeting with tomorrow. The producer was considering him for a supporting role in a film that started shooting on Tuesday, but all Cherokee cared about right now was getting some skin-to-skin time. He'd spent the last two hours surrounded by Dylan's enticing sun and sand cologne, and his cock had practically drilled through his jeans in response.

The upcoming audition required a lot of preparation but as a half-immortal, he didn't need much sleep and had stamina greater than normal men. Unfortunately Dylan, though Hollywood handsome and hard-bodied, was mortal. After Cherokee skipped the last two steps and jumped to the concrete floor of the parking garage, he turned to see Dylan holding back a yawn.

"Long day, huh," Cherokee said, sensing that he'd be spending the night alone after all. He didn't like it but thanks to his other playmates, he could handle it.

"It's the flying that gets to me," Dylan said with a wry smile. "Airplane air quality is terrible."

There had been some wonderful inventions in Cherokee's one hundred and fifty-odd years, but they had taken their toll on the world. He could still remember the clear, crisp air of those mornings in the spectacular forests of the Snowbird Mountains when he lived with his mother, a Ghigau, or war woman, of the Cherokee tribe.

Of course, the mountains were still an amazing place but he was making his home in Los Angeles now. He needed to amass a fortune and build financial security for himself like so many of the immortals did.
